Boston college professor reviews

Boston College is full of professors who will make you think twice before skipping their 9 a.m. class or skimming for the next reading. These professors go beyond numbers and letters to take a deeper look into each of their students' efforts and learning potential. They always push class boundaries to teach their students the most effective, effective way possible. They are unique, intelligent and highly committed to their careers building the millennial generation. Just sitting during working hours for just 10 minutes or attending a lecture, you'll fuel your goal so you can set the aflame world. You want to be one of the lucky students to take a class with one of these professors before you finish B.D. 1. Professor Kerry Cronin You probably have already heard her name before even coming to B.D. Cronin is a research fellow at the Faculty of Philosophy, professor of theology, associate director of the Lonergan Center and an expert on love. Could it be cooler? Across campus, students know Cronin for her famous dating challenge and her strong opposition to the popular connectivity culture that haunts B.B.A. But Professor Cronin's influence on students goes beyond their romantic lives. While she is demanding when it comes to courses, Cronin builds strong relationships with her students. At one of our sessions, I found myself telling her things I had never said to anyone else, and she helped me work through the much turmoil that comes with freshmen of the year.' Sophomore Amanda Ilaria said. Cronin is also grateful for his students and the effort each puts in the classroom. At the end of the year, she thanked us for being in her class and being engaged and thoughtful. It really resonated with me because I never had a teacher thank me for the hard work I put in my classroom, Ilaria said. 2. Professor Ethan Sullivan linkedin.com you know those classes where only the teacher speaks, and the students do not even whisper a word to each other? Professor Sullivan avoids this environment in the classroom at all costs. Sullivan cares so much about his students both inside and outside the classroom, and he cultivates a strong community among students in every classroom, senior Brooke Barlett said. Professor Sullivan at the CSOM Department is such an attractive teacher that students didn't satiation him in his Portico Freshman Class. When they become seniors, many are enrolled in his highly sought-after Morality stone of history. I would strongly recommend it capstone because it was a great way to reflect on my college experience and discuss how best to move from B.D. and cultivate our best selves. Barlett said. Whether he's talking about capitalism or the meaning of life, Sullivan encourages students to voice their own opinions and listen to different opinions. 3. Professor John Gallagher For some professors, the classroom is not enough to achieve the maximum amount of learning. Professor Gallagher is certainly one of the In his award-winning Tech Trek course, Professor Gallagher combines classroom learning with some off-campus experience, taking his class on a weeklong trip to Silicon Valley. We studied 20 different tech companies ranging from smaller startups to public companies like Facebook, Apple and Google, junior Ameet Callarakal said. Professor Gallagher believes in his students; during this trip, he introduces students to BC graduates who now work in important positions at these well-known tech companies, seeking to inspire them to do the same. Professor G inspires energy, cares deeply about his students, and he works tirelessly and brilliantly, ultimately so we can pay it forward as his past students who host us in Silicon Valley, Callaracal added. 4. Professor Susan Roberts pixabay.com For all freshmen who fear their required first year of giving a workshop, Professor Susan Roberts is the solution to your fears. She will do write what you want to do, not what you have to do. Her course content on art and music and her witty personality is more than enough to keep anyone absolutely hooked. With Professor Roberts, research papers can turn into Kendrick Lamar's analysis, and classroom discussions become meaningful conversations with a friend. She once asked us if we had ever told our parents the worst thing we had done our freshman year.' Sophomore Victoria Ang said. She's really unique as a professor because she's really personable. It really encourages academic work, and when it speaks to you, it always makes you feel that your work is important and has potential. 5. Professor Thomas Kaplan Maxfield pexels.com When you go to class to the contagious rhythm of a 60s cliff and a famous man with bushy white hair and a mustache wearing a crazy patterned tie, you know you're in a TKM class. He teaches the first year of giving a workshop, creative nonprofits and love and other difficulties where his wisdom is on the romance of Cupid's rivals. Thomas Kaplan-Maxfield is perhaps one of the coolest professors in B.B. Because of his funny and caring personality, he establishes strong connections with his students, whom he calls his gang. I struggled with depression this year and he was always available to talk to me and support me through anything,' sophomore Louise McEwan said. He could always tell if I had a bad day and just talk me through it. He was letting me come to his office whenever I wanted to, and always made sure I was in a safe place, not one. I probably wouldn't have made it through my freshman year without him. ... If you're looking for an unconventional and eye-eyed professor, TKM is your boyfriend. 6. Professor Nick DiSalvatore giphy.com To meet the basic requirements for philosophy and theological in B.D., you can feel like a burden for many students. But not when you have Nick DiSalvatore your professor of perspectives or putse. Not everyone can link lectures about Plato or excerpts from to the lives of his students, but Nick certainly can. The elder Bennet Johnson recalled that Nick would regularly grab coffee with his one-on-one students to ask them about their lives outside the classroom, making sure they understood the course's content. Additional effort and compassion for his students, along with the fact that he is a living lecturer, really made Nick stand out as a fantastic professor, Johnson said. 7. Professor Igor Minevich linkedin.com that one requirement for the core of mathematics can be the worst nightmare for lovers of the word. Most of us suffer from high school PTSD maths class, and fully believe we are unable to solve a simple equation. But Professor Igor Minevich gives a 180-degree twist to non-math students in his course Ideas in Mathematics. It shows the fun side of algebra and geometry through games such as Sudoku and Battleships, making students enjoy working with numbers. He turns his students into teachers, encouraging them to work through maths cryptography, knitting or even origami and teaching them to their classmates. Its doors are always open to students who wish to better understand the numbers. In addition, Professor Minevich recognizes every tiny piece of effort you put into trying to appreciate what he calls the beauty of mathematics. 8.Professor Tracy Regan linkedin.com Giant Size Devlin 008 is no obstacle for Professor Tracy Regan to keep her students engaged in a large introductory lecture on economics. Professor Regan fortunately has her foot in the doorway of a young adult culture, and is able and willing to weave modern culture, things that students can relate to, in her teaching material, said BC sophomore Danielle Toal. Whether you're an economics major or not, Regan's class is certainly compulsory BC in no way is it easy, but Professor Regan actively engages students by allowing students to successfully and individually challenge themselves to work hard, study and at best what is possible, said Toal.report this ad 9. Professor Elizabeth Goizueta pexels.com If you think you are Hispanic at heart, Elizabeth Goizueta is the perfect professor to share this passion. Her passions include Hispanic art, history and literature. Professor Goizueta is renowned for his senior capstone course called Beyond Study Abroad, where students reflect on their experiences in foreign countries. I really enjoyed how the class structure felt like a book club where we could talk about every piece of work and really delve into meaningful conversations because class only for two and a half hours a week, which made me feel like I was able to take more away from class,' said senior Clarissa Bader. But Professor Goizueta has further influenced B.B. She works with the McMullen Art Museum, where, according to Bader, curates a display by cuban artist Rafael Soriano. For all older people studying abroad, professor Goizueta will carry on your experience together in your life. 10. Professor Seth Jacobs unsplash.com with Professor Seth Jacobs, the history of the Vietnam War or U.S. foreign policy can become anyone's favorite class, whether you're mainstream in history or not. His master's degree in theater and his passion for history make his lectures so interesting that some students record them and listen to them later. Some professors make history look like another event that will remain in the past forever, but not Seth Jacobs. He embraces the importance of past events and speaks of them in a way that will keep them alive in the future. Future.
